I've had this from Mike:

"The importance and uses of aircraft, of wireless, and of wireless intelligence in WW2 are now well known. However, all first became important in warfare in WW1, often in combination. 'Mike' is the former Historian at a now well-known Government establishment in Gloucestershire, and is also a civil and former military pilot of more than 40 years' flying experience. His talk traces the history of the interaction between these technologies and arts from their earliest days."
